Similar work can be done in the simpler acts of the religious life, as, for example, the making of a meditation, a self-examination, etc. The result of our present prevailing system, which proceeds on the supposition that the aim of religious instruction is the acquisition of knowledge rather than the development of the spiritual life, is to leave with the child the impression that the religious facts of life are things to be learned by rote, speculated about, discussed in an academic fashion, but that they have no bearing on the life of a man, that they are not to be lived, but simply thought. It is like beginning a child's education in the schools with a theory of knowledge starting from a definition of the transcendental Ego. The real method of procedure, I am convinced, is from the primary religious activities of the...
