Accordingly, the examinations were commenced where the black shale of the Devonian Age --the most prominent mark of the existence of phosphate rock--appeared en masse boldly. By referring to the attached plate (NO. 8), giving an ideal vertical section of this phosphate region, the relative position of the phosphate rock and accompanying rock strata will be best understood. Generally all of the rock strata are nearly level with a slight dip to southwestward. Occasionally a gentle reverse dip is found, but still the general dip is west of south. There are two strata of phosphate rock found in the region. The upper strata is located at the base of the black shale, and is of dark color; the lower strata is found in the Upper Silurian rocks, from fifty to two hundred feet below the upper strata, and is a white -ellow rock. In Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama, phosphate rock in various nodular shapes and sizes is found in the transition beds just at the top of black shale; but here in Missouri and Arkansas it is absent--that is, as far as the examinations were made. At Harper s Ford (Plate No. A) about a mile southeast from Lanagan. Mo., where the traveled road from Lanagan to Pineville, the county seat of McDonald County, Missouri, crosses Indian Creek just below a mill-dam, the phosphate rock just at the base of the black shale is found on the east side of the creek....
