Excerpt: .beyond the KAHALUU (upper) village, is the south road to Kailua. All three are good. The upper road passes through numerous other villages, populated by whites, Hawaiians and Japanese, and, mainly in the south end of the district, also by Koreans and Filipinos, most of whom are engaged in coffee and tobacco planting. Some awa is also being planted in recent years. The villages run into each other, so it is difficult to say where one ends and another begins. South of Kahaluu are KAINALIU, (whence a trail leads to the makai village of the samenanie), KONAWAENA and KELAKE KUA villages, forming the central part of Kona. At the former is situated the Weeks garage (livery), at Konowaena is a branch of the First Bank of Hilo, and the Yates garage (livery), and at Kealakekua the upper mill of the Captain Cook Coffee Co.,...
